GIRL WHO IS GLAD SHE DID NOT BECOME A LAWYER.

of Following a Profession as She Planned She Became a Dairy-ian—One Year of Scrimping and a Comfortable Livelihood. Then a Comfortable

Five years ago I went into the dairy ss with three cows. To-day re a herd of twenty.

The speaker was a young college woman he a few months after graduation lost or father and found herself and her er with less than $500 capital.

"How did I manage it?" she went on. re long months drove my own milk on: I had planned to study law, not because I was fond of the profession or imagined I had any special talent for it, but because I thought it the proper thing for a college woman to earn her living in a ssion rather than in a trade. My father's sudden death knocked all that out of my head.

"My father had begun to buy the farm I now own. He thought it would do for summer home, never having an idea at any of us would be called on to make living on it. He had paid $500 on it, and with our household furniture, was out all my mother and I had after all the

We didn't have $20 between us, but it in June and a few acres had been ows that had been bought with the place rere fresh to the pail. The day after loved to the farm I took my seat on the blivery wagon and carried around the milk. You see there was but one hired man and with what I planned to do I couldn's afford to have him spend four eclous hours delivering milk.
"As there were three dairies besides my own selling milk in the town our route was far from a house to house er; It was deliver a bottle of milk nd drive a square or two before delivering another. That was the first point I rmined to change. At the end of my and month when the third cow began I had already had all her milk aged in such a way that many of the pape between my other deliveries were

My mother had taken charge of the housework and the

"As our hired man lived with his family we did not have to feed him. During that first year my mother and I hadn't an ounce of meat on our table excepting a chicken once a week, usually on Sundays wher an old friend or relative would come out to see how we were getting on. We lived on eggs and butter and milk, with vegetables grown on the place.

"Our sugar, coffee and tea were limited to the times when visitors had to be fed, yet we managed to get along and very soon didn't miss the meat, the sweets, the tea or the coffee. Now neither of us drinks tea or coffee and we feel that we are all the better without. that first yes, my mother and I hadn't ginning of my third year I would have been at least $500 better of. I tell this as a warning to other women against being in too great a hurry. Slow and sure, but not too slow, is the rule to work by when building up a dairy. Fill your barns, pay for your farm and then branch out.

"Cleanliness and economy is the keynote of my farm and dairy. Not only are the quality and the quantity of the milk improved by the best care, but both food and time are saved. Cleaning out my cow stables every morning I am able to gauge just how much the cows are eating and so do not give them more than they do not give them more than they iean up.
"My first cows being only graded Jer-

My first cows being only graded Jerseys and the calves not so good I did not keep the calves, but sold them to the butcher. This is much cheaper than attempting to raise a calf that is not up to the standard. Now that I have raised the standard of my herd! am keeping all the calves that are up to my standard and in time hope to have a dairy of at least fifty cows.

"My hour for getting to the cow stable is 4 A. M. Before milking each cow is cleaned off with a currycomb, and soap and water when necessary. After the milking each cow has a forkful of hay and the milker and I go to breakfast. As soon as milker and I go to breakfast. As soon as breakfast is over the cows get their daily grain ration and as soon as they have cleaned their troughs they are turned into the rasture in the summer and into the paddock in the winter. It is then that the stalls are cleaned and rebedded. If the weather is fine the cows are left in the pasture or paddock until 2 o'clock, when they are brought back to the stable and fed on hay. At 4 o'clock they are milked again, and after this are fed on mangles or ensilage, with their grain ration.

mangles or ensilage, with their grain ration mixed in. Each eow has a halter and I have never been too busy to make sure that every one of my herd was securely fastened every night since I became a dairy woman. Just as the business man watches his capital so I keep my eyes on any come.

"The floors of my stables are cement and are washed off daily, then sprinkled with land plaster. The stalls are ar-ranged in such a way that each cow's head ranged in such a way that each cow's head is toward a central passageway. I do not use art final heat in the winter.

"Besides the stable, which is not yet a year old, I have two hospitals. Each hospital contains one stall, and as soon as a cow shows signs of ailing she is quarantined. This like many others of the ideas I have made use of was borrowed from persons with more experience with cows than I have yet had Ever since we moved to the farm both my mothe, and I have kept the whitewash brush busy, No spot on the place, fences or buildings, is ever allowed to get dingy. As a result of all this care I have had very little sickness among the cows and never a death. When people say I take too much trouble and work too hard I show them my account beoks and then take them out to look at my herd.

count books and then take them out to look at my herd.

"Would I give up my dairy if I had an opportunity to study and become a lawyer? No, most emphatically no. My chum, who studied law and is considered to be making a very good thing of it, isn't worth enything like as much money as I am today. It was only the other day that she wrote me of her intention to buy a farm as soon as she could raise $500 to make the first payment.

"Besides she is dependent on the good will of other people. She has to be polite to persons in whom she feels no interest for the sake of getting a case. If all my milk and butter customers turned their backs on me to-morrow I could still five very comfortably from the produce of my own farm. We proved that during that first year, when we did without mest and forget the taste of tea and coffee."
